

RUBBER STAMP REPS

Climate Change— Paris Climate Agreement

Dozens of House members represent districts where the majority of the constituents voted against this administration's platform, yet these representatives are acting as rubber stamps for the White House's extreme agenda rather than working for the people they represent.

Issue Background

The below Representatives refused to take a clear stand against this administration's decision to withdraw from the Paris Climate Agreement—the historic international climate accord reached in 2015. In the Paris Agreement, nearly every country in the world came together for the first time ever to make a serious commitment to combat climate change. This administration's decision to withdraw from the Paris Agreement was wrong in every way. It represented a refusal to accept science, an inability to embrace the future, a renunciation of America's global leadership, and a prioritization of extreme ideology over national and global interest.

Despite this administration's choice to bury its head in the sand, the rest of us will continue to move forward. Our allies and adversaries alike are maintaining their commitments to combat climate change. Mayors and governors are already vowing to meet their goals under their Paris agreement. Businesses, big and small, and institutions like church congregations and universities are doubling down on cutting carbon pollution. The clean energy job market continues to boom as growth in industries like solar and wind energy skyrockets. And by overwhelming majorities, the American people want to act on climate change and oppose the administration's decision.

Members of Congress owe their constituents an explanation. They must either speak out opposing this short-sighted move, or tacitly support this Administration's refusal to accept the reality and the science of climate change.
